"Reflection in Solitude"
-Rahul V. Ughade

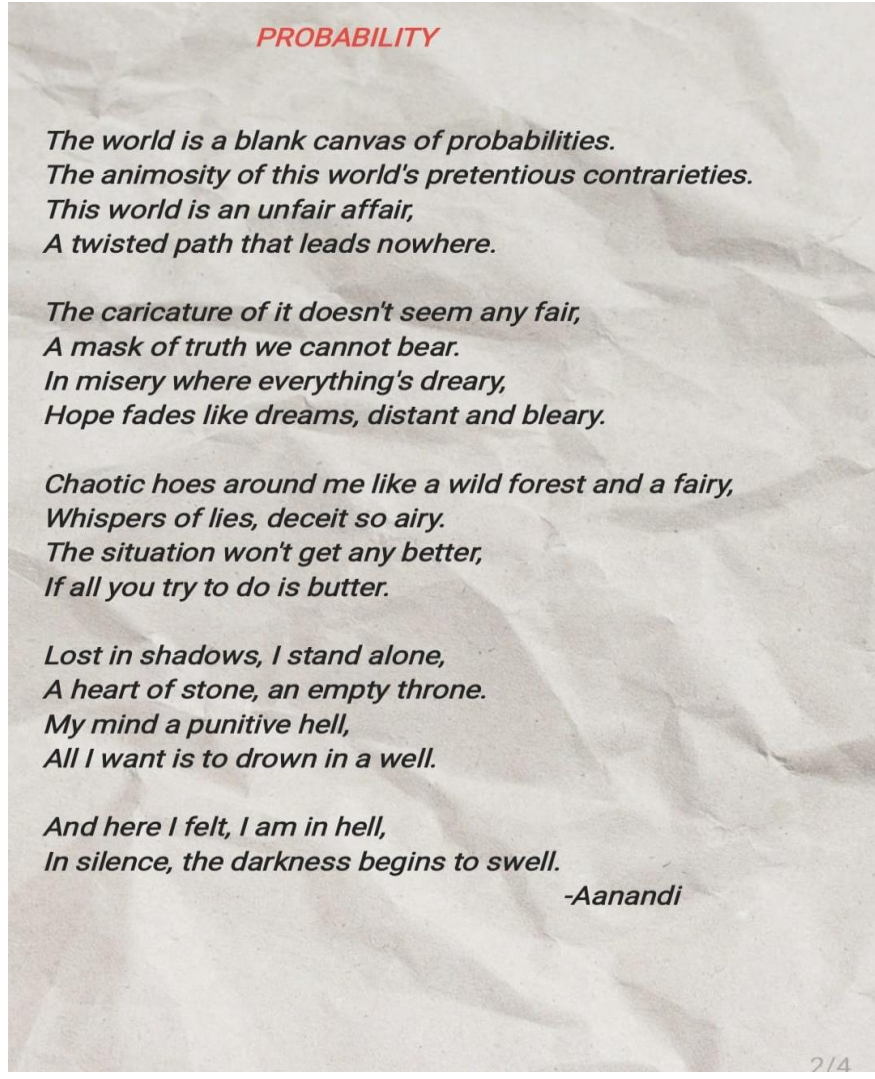

Rahul V. Ughade's sketch beautifully captures a moment of quiet reflection. It portrays a woman sitting by a barred window, wrapped in a shawl, gazing outside. The soft shading and attention to detail create a sense of calm, yet the bars suggest confinement. This delicate contrast between solitude and longing invites viewers to reflect on their own inner thoughts, making the piece both powerful and serene in its simplicity.

PROBABILITY

*The world is a blank canvas of probabilities.
The animosity of this world's pretentious contrarities.
This world is an unfair affair,
A twisted path that leads nowhere.*

*The caricature of it doesn't seem any fair,
A mask of truth we cannot bear.
In misery where everything's dreary,
Hope fades like dreams, distant and bleary.*

*Chaotic hoes around me like a wild forest and a fairy,
Whispers of lies, deceit so airy.
The situation won't get any better,
If all you try to do is butter.*

*Lost in shadows, I stand alone,
A heart of stone, an empty throne.
My mind a punitive hell,
All I want is to drown in a well.*

*And here I felt, I am in hell,
In silence, the darkness begins to swell.*

"Probability"
-by Aanandi N. Shertate

is a deep, introspective poem that captures the speaker's experience with despair and the harsh realities of the world. The world is presented as a "blank canvas of probabilities," yet one marred by pretentiousness, unfairness, and a sense of futility. Through evocative imagery, the poem explores themes of deception, loneliness, and internal struggles, portraying a mind that feels trapped in a "punitive hell." The final lines leave the reader with a sense of heavy darkness, as silence swells and the speaker confronts their own suffering
